GOLD AND MEDALS

FOR HEROES.

The Carnegie Hero commission has issued a report in which the occasion of each award is concisely stated. Of the silver medals twenty-five and of the bronze medals sixteen have gone to women and girls, ranging from nine years to over sixty.

The commission has granted thirteen gold medals, 227 silver medals and 343 bronze medals, a total of 583, and to heroes and their dependents, including pension payments, it has disbursed $505,356. It has also contributed nearly $155,000 to funds for the relief of sufferers from great disasters, and for special purposes in connection with the Carnegie Institute, $200,000.

The first gold medal awarded by the Carnegie Hero commission was to Captain Mark Casto, who, with six volunteers and the schooner Albatross, rescued fifty-two persons in a fire on the steamer Cherokee at Atlantic City, January 14, 1906. Casto also got $6,500 and each of the men who went with him got a silver medal and $500.

On April 30, 1906, a workman was imprisoned in an air chamber in a tunnel under the Milwaukee river, which was leaking. Three members of the city fire department descended a shaft fifty-five feet deep and rescued him, for which each received a gold medal and $1,500.

On February 12, 1907, Captain John W. Smith, of the schooner Elsie, with seven volunteers, rescued several passengers from the steamer Larchmont, off Block Island. The temperature was two degrees above zero; the wind was blowing thirty-five miles an hour, and the waves were running twenty feet high when the Elsie was taken five miles to sea, and fifteen bodies, living and dead, were taken from a raft. Each of the eight men received a gold medal and money ranging from $1,000 to $6,000.

On November 25, 1906, a well caved in, in Kansas, burying one man entirely and another almost. Another cave-in was imminent and threatened the men who gathered around attempting a rescue. Andrew J. Herger went down into the hole, thirty-two feet deep, alone, rescued the living man and brought up the body of the other, and was engaged more than two hours. He received a gold medal and $3,600.

FLAG DESECRATION.

The dispatches of yesterday told the story of two May Day demonstrations of the American flag in both of which members of the despicable order, the I. W. W., were concerned.

It was unfortunate, though not natural, that one of these incidents should have occurred at a socialist meeting and it was quite proper and

CAUGHT ON THE FLY

Several safety razors have been sent to Woodrow Wilson. Some people must think he is going to have a close shave.

Mayor Shank of Indianapolis is being spoken of for the vice presidency. What have they got against him?

Mr. Bryan doesn't like Gov. Harmon and it begins to look as though the feeling is entirely mutual.

A Chicago professor says love-making is a science. Yes, very often it becomes a domestic science.

A man who can buy butter on credit nowadays really should be operating in Wall Street.

What if Washington did have red hair. He wore a wig and nobody knew it but Martha.

New York taxicab robbers are looting banks. Heretofore they have confined efforts to robbing the taxicab patrons.

Woodrow Wilson says there are many invisible bricks in politics. Yes, and many visible gold bricks.

Report says Uncle Jim Wilson will retire. Yes, he probably will to-night and tomorrow night, and so on.

The presents are numerous and costly.

CILDING the LILY

By DOROTHY DALE.

The bombast of education! Was there ever a more striking example of it than toward the end of Miss Esther Mercer's slander suit against Dean Talbot, of the University of Chicago, when things were not going Dean Talbot's way?

"The great University of Chicago is scandalized!" declaimed the woman dean's attorney in a plea for the quick ending of the unpleasant testimony.

No doubt the great institution of learning was scandalized. It ought to have been. So were all the people, who followed the proceedings, scandalized. But not because some one had dared to bring suit against one of the erudite faculty of a great university, but because a woman of such power and standing as Dean Talbot had not the wisdom and conscience to have been a wise student, instead of a burning her.

Of all the pedestals that mortals mount, is there any more contemptible than the pedestal of educational supremacy? Money extravagance is nothing beside it, for money doesn't always go hand in hand with mind. What if Rockefeller millions have given this university every advantage that money can procure? What if, in turn, it can offer wonderful advantages to students? What if Dean Talbot is a travelled, splendidly educated woman? Are any of these humiliating facts reasons why a little human insight and cultured conscience could not be mixed with the mental training offered to students?

Education is not a passport to heaven. Neither is it a passport to terrestrial advancement and honor unless the germ of delivering is in the possessor. Haven't you noticed again and again that where several men are working together, you often find that the man in authority—the man drawing the biggest salary—never goes on a show place, while some of his $300-a-week helpers have the sheepskin mark all over them.

That's not belittling university training. No one denies it is wonderful opportunity. It opens far-reaching avenues of delight. It puts the key to the treasures of life in the hands of its possessors. But it does not draw its devotees up into some fourth dimension exempt from the laws governing the other three.

Dean Talbot, just as other deans in our institutions of learning, has the making or breaking of lives in her to their credit that the leaders of the socialists disclaimed any part in the act of desecration. A majority of socialists are patriotic and thoughtful citizens yet the field of socialism is broad and the boundaries between it and anarchy are not always well defined, so that it becomes easy for anarchists to claim affiliation with socialism and behind its purpose to make the world better they may conceal a purpose to destroy order.

Returning to the flag desecration incident, it is, of course, impossible by law or force to compel respect for the flag, though open insult of it may be prevented. It would perhaps be better to leave this matter to patriotic citizens, police and other authorities with instructions that it would be good form to shoot down like a mad dog any man who desecrates the flag.

hands. She can be an invulnerable power for helping foolish girls to see their faults and turn from them, or she can embitter them.

"You are an immoral woman," Miss Mercer testified Dean Talbot told her, after asking how a comparatively poor girl could wear such pretty clothes as she did. Contrast as piece of position and power with the use Jenny Lind made of the position won for her by her training. When she says to charity in the streets of this country, the rabble stamped and beat sticks, instead of always politely clapping. But did this wonderful slinger, whose gift was greater than logic or philosophy, call them or their manners hard names? No; she saw their tears and their smiles, and said reverently: "Isn't it nice, I can sit so."

Education and training are powers all right. But all power is not seated in the heavy end of a club. Knocking people down is one kind. Helping them up is another. And no one is going to mistake strength because it is mixed with gentleness.

The ladies of the order were beautifully gowned in honor of the occasion. A sumptuous banquet was prepared by the ladies and amidst toasts and responses, a most delightful evening was enjoyed.

That Tombstone does not propose to sit idly by when any county seat removal legislation is proposed, was amply manifested on Monday night, when a meeting of the citizens of Tombstone gathered at the city hall to voice a vigorous protest against any effort to change the present county seat. It was shown to the satisfaction of those present, that the agitation of which now is manifesting itself in the legislature being traceable to the same selfish interests of a Cochise coterie that would unduly and unjustly sully a burden of $350,000 on the taxpayers to promote their own interests.

It is stated here on what we think very good authority, that the county seat removal bill will not be acted upon this session at Phoenix.

STATE COURT WILL

HEAR BIG LAW SUIT

Gleeson Against Costello Can't Go to United States Court

The attempt of the attorneys for the Martin Costello estate to have the big suit pending against the estate for one million dollars, with John Gleeson, as plaintiff, transferred to the United States court was a failure. This feature of the case, one of the largest ever on the docket of any Arizona court, was heard last week before the United States court at Phoenix. The estate was represented by Hon. Ben Goetzlich, now of Los Angeles while George Neale, of Bisbee appeared for Gleeson. Judge Hunt, of San Francisco, who heard the motion decided that it must be tried in the superior court, according to the contention of the plaintiff. Prior to this hearing the same motion had been denied by Judge Cooper, superior judge of Pima county when the defendant asked him to transfer the case to the United States court.

This case has been in the court for several years already and it is attracting much interest because of the large acquaintance and prominence of Gleeson, in the county, and because of the wide acquaintance of Costello before his death.

The suit is for an accounting for a partnership which is alleged to have existed between Costello and Gleeson, owning mining property in the Gleeson district said to be worth more than a million dollars, some of which had been sold by Costello, before his death.

This case was tried in Tucson more than a year ago, before the old territorial district judge, but he had not rendered a decision at the time the admission of Arizona as a state was completed, so that it must now be retried again in the superior court. Judge Sutter, of this county, is disqualified by the fact of his being a member of the law firm of Neale & Sutter at the time the suit against Costello was filed.

The case will be tried by another of the superior judges, as decided upon by the parties at interest.
